

OACETT 2010 Salary Survey

Order Form

Earn more with certification

Responses gathered from more than 3,000 members across a variety of industries and disciplines for OACETT's 2010 Salary Survey shows that certification correlates strongly with higher levels of compensation. Compared to associate members, certified technologists and technicians earn on average $38,000 more in annual salary, a 26 per cent premium which has a present value over a 52-year career of $298,220.

"Based on the survey findings, the future is looking bright for engineering technicians and technologists," said OACETT President David Saunders, B.E.S., C.E.T. "Employers are seeing the value of certification which is leading to certified professionals getting hired and earning top dollar."

The 2010 Member and Employer Salary Surveys are now available to non-members at $350 each or $500 for both.
